

Christina:

So it was like the last day of Fresher's week and everyone was being a bit shy in their rooms and Martyn made everyone meet in the kitchen so that we could all meet each other. He just dragged everyone out of their bedrooms and made sure that no one was on their own, he wouldn't let anyone be on their own...He said "We are all getting ready to go to Freshers".

So Mikey and Alastair, who you've probably spoken to, were there as well... and everyone was getting ready to leave and the girl next door to me got locked in her room, like the lock on her door broke and he'd only just met us but he waited with us for security to let her out. He missed out on his Fresher's Night to make sure we weren't left on our own...so the five of us went out and it was my first ever proper night out in town, because obviously I was 18 and we went to some clubs and danced all night, it was lovely...

I'm a very cautious person with who I'm friends with and it takes a lot of time for me to kind of open up and be properly friends with someone, whereas he gave himself to everyone straight away and so it meant that he was friends with everybody, loved everybody, didn't matter who they were or what background they were from and he kind of took in strays. That's the main thing that I remember about him from uni...
